"A thing of beauty is a joy forever..." John Keats, Endymion, Book I

My photography career started in the days of heavy black-and-white sheet-film press cameras and continues in the digital era. The print styles available from any given image depends on how and in which decade it was shot. But regardless of style, you will receive a print made to modern standards of accuracy, tonal range and longevity.

Beautiful, durable, ready-to-frame reproductions

You can order my photography in the form of beautiful high-resolution pigment-inkjet prints ("Giclée") rated fade-resistant for over 100 years. They are produced one at a time under exacting conditions to be true to the original.

We start with a high resolution scan – high enough to capture the film grain in most cases. In case of images previously printed in the darkroom, the digital print comes as close as possible to my original printing density range and any dodging or burning done at that time.

Grayscale ("black-and-white") images are printed on heavy fine art fine-art watercolor paper, matte finish with a 2" white margin.

Color photographs are printed on bright white high-gloss paper to reduce reflection loss in the shadow areas. This brings the print as close as possible to the reality it depicts.

While the price form shows only typical sizes, you can order any size, bearing in mind that sharpness falls off as size increases. All sizes are printed with an extra 2" of blank paper all around to allow for matting. For sizes not listed, email me.

Purchase of a print does not convey any rights to use of the image beyond display of the print. Display does include showing it off on social media.
